

The Vital Ingredient

THE FOOD INDUSTRY OPENS ITS DOORS TO APPRENTICES!

Image: Kyle Hendry,
Bakery Apprentice
at food ingredients
manufacturer, Macphie

The UK government is committed to delivering an extra 250,000 apprenticeship places by 2015 and the Food and Drink Federation (FDF) is determined to capitalise on this pledge by increasing the number of apprenticeships available in the food and drink manufacturing sector.

Food and drink manufacturing looks set to grow quickly as global demand for our products increases. To meet the future challenges of food security and climate change, we'll be using innovative technologies in engineering, IT and life sciences, and so we'll need highly skilled individuals to help us.

Apprenticeships are a fantastic route into the food industry which is crying out for managers, engineers, technicians and food scientists. An apprenticeship enables you to learn as well as earn and gives you an opportunity to obtain hands-on relevant training.

To attract talented young people into our sector, FDF has launched its careers campaign 'Taste Success - A Future in Food' providing information on the wide range of exciting career opportunities that the food industry has to offer.

About Us The Food and Drink Federation (FDF) represents the interests of food and drink manufacturers across the UK, who employ a staggering 400,000 people in a huge variety of roles from scientists and food technologists to engineers and technicians to marketers and salesmen.

www.fdf.org.uk